As outdoor spaces in Wales prepare to welcome visitors from Monday, First Minister Mark Drakeford has urged people visiting the countryside, beaches and beauty spots to do so safely.

The requirement to stay local was lifted today enabling people to travel in Wales and into Wales. It will also mean outdoor visitor attractions can open and it will pave the way for the tourism sector to begin re-opening from 11 July, if conditions allow.

The Welsh Government has been working with local authorities, national parks, Natural Resources Wales and other landowners to ensure Wales' wonderful outdoors are ready to welcome visitors. This includes new guidance about public toilets, focusing on hygiene, social distancing, signage and queuing. Not all public toilets, however, will be safe to re-open so people are being advised to check in advance what facilities will be open. https://gov.wales/first-minister-asks-people-visit-wales-safely
